Twenty couples played the euchre tables, and the [illegible] was a gilded youth [illegible] midnight supper. An elegant supper. An elegant supper was served to guests, and consisted of a large variety of substantials, cakes and ices, and coffee. Another feature was consumed at supper, so that it was 1:30 o'clock when the company began to depart for their homes. The guests bestow the very warmest praise on the host, who provided such an excellent evening's entertainment.

LETTER FROM PENSELVANIA.—Finleyville, R. D. 99, Dec. 29th, 1902.—Editor of THE OUTLOOK, Dear Sir: I have had the privilege of reading a few copies of your paper and in looking over the columns of last week's paper I noticed the "Reflections of a Bachelor." I feel very sorry for him. He believes "When humanity begins to think it stops having fun." From the tone of his "reflections" his days of having fun are over, for he has surely begun to think. I pity him these long winter nights tossing and thinking from bed time until dawn and no companion to share his troubles. I presume he never had the pleasure of calling on a young lady and if he did she never had the pleasure of occupying a seat at a place of amusement with him, for he seems to have figured out just how many car fare shines he could buy the baby with the money it took to buy opera tickets. Now, he must not think that babies are like bedbugs—they don't multiply fast. He might get left. But if this old bachelor ever could get married I would advise him to have a bath-tub large enough to accomodate a baby that boasts as well as a small one, for it is my opinion that he will have the pleasure of buying slabs for more than one woman unless he changes his way of thinking. His appears to be very uncasy about poor relations. Perhaps he could marry a girl that has no relations. I know he will hunt for one of that kind and will have the patience of Job trying to find her. And I hope for his wife's sake he will succeed.

Work is being pushed rapidly on the new bridge. The bridges are most all completed. A number of the bridge-builders from Kentucky are working under Frank Wills; boarded at Mrs. J. C. Wall's, but have moved from there to Castle Shannon.

The Sunday school annual entertainment was held Wednesday night. The little folks had some fine recitations. The singing by the choir was enjoyed very much.

Snow is falling and sleighing is looked forward to with pleasure by the young folks.

FRIEND OF BACHELORS.

THE MASQUERADE BALL.—The elite of Owingsville,—especially and particularly those of the chosen who practice the terpsichorean art under the auspices of the Owingsville Dancing Club,—for the second consecutive New Year's eve, assembled at the Court house Wednesday night of last week—not to "muse upon the past with sorrow," but the rather—to rejoice with Old Father Time as he sent "another year to blend with the mysterious tides of Old Eternity." For why should vivacious innocence, youth and beauty and buoyant young manhood and chivalrous spirit have any poet to muse upon with sorrow? Sad memories are not for them; bright anticipations, radiant hopes, are their portion, and ho is a curmudgeon who would deny to them their dues. Though the old year may have "borne along upon its heaving breast a thousand wrecks of glory and of beauty" it is not for them to "mourn that such is destiny." And there is no more expressive way of manifesting the joy of living than in the graceful dance to the strains of inspiring music. Therefore, on with the dance! Let joy be unconfined and bright lights shine over the revelry of fair women and brave men as they vindicate their youth and enjoy the heritage that is theirs while it lasts!

The spectators began to gather about eight o'clock in the ball-room, which presented an inviting appearance with its are light and white canvassed and waxed floor. Soon in couples and groups came the maskers. The ladies with very few exceptions wore the same style of costumes—white dominoes—and they looked ghostly enough. None but their intimates could make even a reasonable guess as to their identity.

The gentleman maskers mostly wore fantastic costumes; some wore ladies' dominoes.

Wm. F. Mark selected a fake face that was an exact counterpart of his features except for its exaggerated and unnatural color, without any other disguise.

Clerk Peterson portrayed the agile Spanish matador and looked like he could dispatch a wild, fierce bull with Castillian grace while receiving the plaudits of the fair senoritas.

George Dawson represented a "Canvassing Candidate," with shield and sword and an elaborate costume that defies ready description. He could have had all the votes for the asking.

Eugene Brother was a Franciscan or "black" monk all right, but he was clothed in the garbs of the cowlack plan too without an effort.

[illegible] the clown of a clown and worth [illegible]

Joe Conner all worn women's dominoes. Jo invaded the ladies' dressing room, and as the fair maskers crowded around him to study his style one got a glimpse of his face and then the girls were onto him.

T. S. Shrout was immense as a nondescript and provoked much merriment.

Jack Owings went as a "Curious Old White Man" and he looked the part to perfection.

Misses Ella Hargrove and James Russ were only comlo false faces.

Morris Brown and Wallace Gudgell were dandy cowboys from the wild and woolly West.

If there were any other male maskers they were not identified, as all quickly unmasked, owing to the warmth engendered by thick coverings of the face.

Not many sets were danced before all masks were discarded. The dancing continued until about 12 o'clock, when there was an intermission for lunch. About one o'clock dancing was resumed and kept up until about 5 o'clock.

The ball was as all-around success and adds another to the long list of the Owingsville Dancing Club. The utmost decorum prevailed, which has come to be a matter of course at the public gatherings of society in this town.

The dancers present were:—

Misses: Mary McQueen, Louise Wills; Annie Winn Williams, Frankfort; Ida Walds, Nicholasville; Mary Miller Coleman and Corinne Kirkpatrick, Mt. Sterling; Ella Ratliff, Sharpsburg; Nell McCoy and Juliet Wood, Lexington; Lucile Alexander, Olympia; Nell Wills, Mary Gudgell, Mary Conner, Ellen Botts, Lorena Perry, May Kincaid, Lillian Daugherty, Anna Peters, Clera Beason, Louise Gudgell, Julia Elliott, Lottie Atchison.

Mrs. and Mrs: O. B. Brother, Emmett Fratman, C. M. Kennedy, A. H. Dawson, W. F. Mark, W. B. Patterson, A. N. Crooke, Dr. J. H. Taulbee.

MESDAMES: Walter Harper, Mt. Sterling; N. B. Baldwin, Nicholasville.

The KIDNAPPED MILLIONAIRES

A Tale of Wall Street and the Tropics

CHAPTER I.

KIDNAPPED.

"All about the Kidnapped Millionaires!! Record Extra! All about the Great Mystery! The Record Extra!"

Hundreds of newsboys poured from an alley and dashed into the human currents which swarmed at the confluence of Nassau street and Park Row. In a moment the air was aflame with the red headlines of the "Record Extra." It was not necessary to buy a paper. The type was so large that one could read it from the pavement.

For a week the Wall street boom ...e sensation of New York ...e country. The perpetual excitement which reigns within the shadow of Trinity church had permeated office and counting room. It was the whispered topic of conversation among strangers, and the newspaper. He therefore abandoned the idea.

He had no difficulty in forming a close acquaintance with Robert Vernor Horne. They were fellow-members of several clubs, and both were fitted by wealth and education to move in the same social circles. Hestor had no time in confiding his ambitions to Mr. Van Horne. He wished to make his mark in the world as a journalist. Mr. Van Horne readily perceived that Hestor was a genius in his line of thought and action. The ambitious amateur would listen to no proposition involving pay for his services. All he asked was a chance to plan and execute his perfect journalistic commissions which gave play to his genius as an initiator and to his skill as a writer.

Mr. Van Horne was delighted to accept the volunteer services of the brilliant but erratic Walter B. Hestor. At the time this story opens Hestor was about 32 years old. He was a member of a New York family which traced its wealth and ancestry to the sixteenth century. His fortune was an independent one; and, though his tastes were expensive, he did not live up to his income.

It would take a volume to recount the journalistic exploits of Walter B. Hestor. He built the yacht Shark, and employed it in his worldwide search for sensational news. Its speed and passengers from a sinking liner, and was decorated by four governments for bravery. In every war the Shark was in the foreground. It was the Hestor yacht that ran the batteries at Havana and escaped from the harbor with valuable news and information. At every signal of trouble Hestor and the "Shark" were sure to be on hand long before the representatives of other papers were aware that news was brewing. At his own expense he established a system of espionage on all the courts of Europe. Hestor was known in the chancelleries of royalty, and in a few years became recognized as the most brilliant newspaper correspondent in the world.

At the time this story opens Mr. Hestor had returned to New York after a cruise in Philippine waters. He was interviewed by all the newspapers, and his portrait flashed from hundreds of prints in all parts of the country. He was a modest and happy of his success. His mind was ever alert for some scheme which would gratify his ambition. He regarded his foreign triumphs as but stepping stones to some great coup which would dwarf them all in fame.

Hestor was disappointed when he learned that Mr. Van Horne had departed recently on a secret mission to Europe. At first he thought of joining him, but finally decided to remain in New York for a time and devote his energies to matters of local interest. Hestor was greeted warmly at the clubs, and found himself a popular hero. He was welcomed at the theaters and some of his newspaper exploits were made the subject of a topical song and rendered with great success at a leading vaudeville hall. For some time he had led a life free from care in company with congenial spirits, when fate glad to shine in his reflected fame.

At the office of The Record Mr. Hestor had a luxurious private room, as befitted his rank as the special envoy of the paper. One afternoon he received a message from his old friend Sidney Hammond, stating that he would be in the city for two days, at the end of which time he would be compelled to make a western trip on important business. Hestor was delighted to hear from Sidney Hammond, and at once arranged a theater and supper party in his honor.

A party of eight occupied the lower box at the opera and thoroughly enjoyed "La Boheme." Walter B. Hestor and Miss Edith Le Roy; Sidney Hammond and Miss Olive, his sister; Mr. Converse and Miss De Neuville; Mr. Blake and Miss Mereweb, constituted the merry group, such at the conclusion of the opera, mingled in the fashionable mob, and after the usual delays and annoyances found themselves in carriages speeding toward Fifth avenue.

There was a crush of carriages in front of Delmonico's. It was the right hour when New York attains the height of its feverish activity. The avenue was alive with swift-moving equipages. An army of lackeys was busy receiving the arriving guests. Inside the massive doors, the strains of an orchestra throbbed in an air of heavy perfume. The glare of light from thousands of electric globes was reflected from glass and marble, but subdued by palms and masses of roses.

A table had been reserved for Mr. Hestor and his guests—brave in the army of linen and flowers, and its glitter of cut glass. As Mr. Hestor entered the hall he was recognized by scores of friends and for a few moments held an impromptu reception.

When this social duty was ended, Miss Edith Le Roy took prompt charge of certain details—as was the wont of this vivacious young woman. Mr. Hestor had seated himself next to Sidney Hammond. Miss Le Roy had no idea of consenting to such an arrangement.

"You are the host, Mr. Hestor," she said, "and you must take the head of the table. Miss Meredith will sit at your right, and Mr. Hammond will take his place next to her. Then I am not going to permit you and Mr. Hammond to monopolize each other's conversation. I can trust you, Miss Meredith, to keep Sidney and Walter from entering into any discussion of their dreary schemes for reconstructing the universe."

The dinner began in merrily amid a general conversation in which a limitless number of topics were included—personal, and dismissed. Terrapin followed bouillon, and canvas back ducks were served with some rare old Burgundy. The spacious dining halls had in the meantime become crowded, and the orchestra encountered a noisy rival in the laughter and conversation which arose in a harmonious blend from hundreds of tables. Dainty preparations of shell fish gave place to terrapin, followed by a grouse, which Miss Le Roy pronounced "a dream in old rose." While the ladies discussed bonbons, the gentlemen lit cigars or cigarettes, and wooed the god of Nicotine with all the ardor which follows the enjoyment of so sumptuous a repast.

While Miss Le Roy was energetically defending her favorite French author from an attack unwittingly made by Mr. Blake, her plans so carefully arranged at the opening of the dinner were rudely disrupted. Sidney Hammond, who readily persuaded Miss Meredith to change places with him, Miss Le Roy smiled her assent when she discovered this duplicity and promptly announced a social boycott against the ungallant Hestor and Hammond, who already were absorbed in a quiet conversation on a topic which seemed of special interest to them.

Sidney Hammond was a college mate of Walter Hestor. He was the stroke oar in the famous crew of '98, which brought the pride of the rival university. Unlike many of the athletic heroes of the institutions of learning, Hammond combined the frame of a muscular Apollo with the brain of the scholar. He was even more a hero with the professors than on the campus. The text and reference books prescribed in the curriculum served Mr. Hammond primarily for research. Though abundantly able, through the generosity of his father, to enter into all of the pleasures of the gilded class to which he belonged, a rare feat of remaining a studious recluse and retaining his popularity with it. During the years spent in college he was an intellectual and physical machine, seemingly incapable of mental or bodily fatigue. The few friends who enjoyed the privilege of his apartments found him the best of hosts, with a well-appointed sideboard and the choicest of cigars. Except on rare occasions Hammond did not permit these social relaxations to intrude on his time, and his friends grew to know just how long Sidney would tolerate their company in preference to his books.

Hestor sipped a glass of wine, knocked the ashes from his cigar and extended an enameled cigar case to Hammond.

"How long does our famous correspondent intend to remain in New York?" asked Sidney Hammond. "It must seem dull here after what you have been through."

"It seems good to be here," replies Hestor. "I am going to quit globe trotting around and stay in this country for awhile. I believe there is more big news on the tapis here than anywhere in the world. I believe there is some sensational news about the trusts if it could be obtained and properly handled."

"They are getting big enough and bold enough to attract attention," said Hammond. "There will be plenty of news about them some days."

"How do you like the Record's leading editorial to-day?" he asked.

"The one about the big steel combine, do you mean?"

"Yes."

"Candidly, I cannot say I liked it," said Hammond, after a moment's pause, "I suppose Williams wrote it. It seems like his stuff. Williams is a good writer, and there is no better man on local issues, but I am afraid the trust problem is beyond his depth. He denounces the trusts. He might as well denounce the Galveston disaster. He has treated The Record readers to an entertaining piece of novel hit of trust invective. I presume it is what they want, but what good does it do? He proposes no remedy."

Text:—"Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Zech. 4:6.

"God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform."

The magic wand of the good fairy of my boyhood story book always held a peculiar fascination for me. That the simple waving of the rod in the hands of the little creature could accomplish such wonderful things as were told in the fairy stories was not very deeply, and I sighed for the fairy's talisman that would make of life such an easy problem. It seemed such a desirable thing to be able to do things as the fairy did, and my imaginative mind pictured all the good deeds I would perform if the fairy's wand were placed in my hand. Little then did I think, as I pored over the fascinating stories and spent hours in fairy dreaming, that the wonderful things in the fairy story had their realization in the spiritual realm, and that the potency of the fairy's wand was as nothing in comparison with the marvelous operations of the Spirit of God. It was the Spirit of God moving through the rod in Moses' hand which wrought such mighty wonders as the presence of Pharaoh, which opened a way through the Red sea, which made the hard rocks of the wilderness yield their gushing waters, which gave the Israelites the victory over the Amalekites. It was the Spirit of God that circled the city of Jericho in answer to the obedient faith of God's people and that rang out in the shout and the trumpet blast and laid the massive walls of the heathen stronghold low upon the ground. It was the Spirit of God that moved in the times of the Judges and wrought mighty deliverances for God's oppressed people. It was the Spirit of God which on the day of Pentecost transformed a handful of simple-hearted, ignorant disciples into fluent linguists preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ in every known tongue. It was the Spirit of God which wrought such mighty wonders through the instrumentality of the disciples in the early days of the church. It is the Spirit of God Whose tracings can be discovered running through the sacred pages of God's Word from Genesis to Revelation. More marvelous and fascinating is it all than the most extravagant fairy tale. The latter is naught but a fable, but the former is the truth and majesty and power of God.

There are two reasons why man fails to understand and appreciate the operations of the Spirit of God: First, because he does not know God's will, and, second, because he has an alien spirit from the righteousness of God. The Spirit of God always operates along the line of God's will and moves within the bounds of God's righteousness. In this materialistic age man's will shuts out the vision of the will of God and man's self-righteousness and self-esteem render him insensible to the righteousness of God, and hence the "might and power" of man is undaily magnified and emphasized and the workings of God's Spirit are lost sight of. But nevertheless it is the eternal and unchangeable truth of God that it is "not by might, nor by power of man," but by the Spirit of God, that the purposes of God are wrought out and His will done.

Zerubbabel, to whom the words of our text were sent through the prophet Zechariah, had been called to a great work by the Lord. The task of rebuilding the wall around Jerusalem and the restoring of the temple had been treated upon him. After the first burst of enthusiasm of the people incident to the return from captivity and the reestablishment of the homes in Jerusalem, the work of rearing the city's protecting wall and restoring the temple lagged, discouragement fell the hearts of the gigantic task. As Christian people are always so prone to do, he came to feel that he was carrying the burden all alone. That it all depended upon him, if the walls were completed and the temple reconstructed. And in proportion as he took his eyes off God and looked within himself for the power and ability to carry on the great work, he became discouraged and perhaps was almost ready to give up in disgust. He did not have the sympathy and cooperation of the inhabitants of the city, as he had the right to demand and expect. He doubtless tried to push and drive them to the completion of the task and found that he had not power to accomplish. Perhaps he set to scolding them in the impatience of his discouragement. Perhaps he went as far as some Christians do when facing difficulties similar to those of Zerubbabel, and threatened to quit and go back to the easier surroundings of the Babylonian home. And just at the point when he fully realized how utterly helpless he was to accomplish the task before him, and when, utterly discouraged, he was ready to give up, God sent His prophet to him with the reassuring message that it was not by the might and power" of a talented and able Zerubbabel that the work of the Lord was to be accomplished, but that it was through the mysterious and marvelous operations of the Spirit of God.

If the question had been asked of Zerubbabel before the, word of God by His prophet had come to him, as to what were the most discouraging features of the work he had in hand, he would have been able to quickly and readily enumerate a score of difficulties, foremost among them being the lack of appreciation by the people of the great work he was trying to accomplish, and following them, the lack of support he was receiving from them in carrying on the work, and the unkindly criticism and strong opposition which came from certain quarters of the city. God knew that Zerubbabel was not changed a whit since the days of Zerubbabel. Christian people everywhere to-day are meeting with discouragements and delays in the tasks which God has given them to do and, Zerubbabel-like, they feel that the whole burden rests upon them, that they are not appreciated, that they are not receiving the support it is their right to expect, and that the unkindly criticism and strong opposition met with are more than they can endure. They become discouraged, they lose heart and confidence, they are ready to throw up their hands in despair and give up the task altogether. It is then that God comes, as He came to Zerubbabel, and whispers to the troubled soul he look away from self and the discouragements and learn that it is "not by might, nor by power," but by the Spirit of God that His work is to be accomplished. Oh, what a lesson to [illegible] No Christian can do constant [illegible] successful work for God until he [illegible] journed in despair with Zerubbabel [illegible] r the unaccepted wall and ten[illegible] the task God has given him to [illegible] has finally, in the last dying [illegible] of utter discouragement, looked up and caught a vision of the Eternal God and beheld His omnipotent arm nerving to his aid.

I imagine I can see Zerubbabel sitting with bowed head in his home after another [illegible] urging day on the city wall and [illegible] at the unsightly ruins of the [illegible]. It has been a push and a d[illegible] day, and apparently nothing [illegible] He has been unable to inspire t[illegible]ple with a sense of the task before [illegible]m. They are more concerned about their homes and the gratification of their own desires and the carrying out of their own plans than the [illegible]s to perform the work of the L[illegible]. He has just thrown himself up his mind [illegible]hat with the morning light he will send in his resignation, easily and quickly [illegible] the people to their indifference and their fate, when a gentle tap on the door announces a visitor. Without looking up, too discouraged to be [illegible]ospitable, even civil, he [illegible]tiently bids the waiting one to enter. [illegible]e Christian soul, have you ever [illegible] Zerubbabel that night? Has [illegible] come home discouraged from [illegible]day school, from church, [illegible]ing people's meeting, from [illegible]ng, from any of the various forms of activity which it may be God has called you to perform for Him, and thrown yourself into a chair or upon the couch and, covering your face with your hands, given way to your discouragement? Such experiences come to us all. But let us return to Zerubbabel and see who his visitor is and what his message.

The door is pushed open and the prophet, Zechariah, enters. A quiet figure in the bowed penitent's pose in the whole story. God has sent him just in time. God always comes when the soul is best prepared to receive His message and to learn the lesson. If the prophet had come a few days before, when Zerubbabel was confidently depending upon himself and was planning a new method to arouse the people to the task before them, his message would not have been received or understood. But now the Jewish leader has come to the end of his resources. He has tried everything to make the Lord's work go. Perhaps he had stirred the good ladies up and had tried church suppers and bazaars on the temple lot to encourage the rebuilding. Perhaps he had offered prizes out on the city wall for the fastest and best worker, or had started unique little entertainments, sort of side shows, you know, to draw the crowds out to the walls in the hope that once he had enticed them there he could set them to work. And so it had gone on, day after day. Each day saw a failure of his own plans, and each night sleepless eyes and wakeful brain sought for new methods to be tried on the morrow. Have you ever been in poor Zerubbabel's fix? Have you wrestled in such a desperate way with the work of the Lord? Well, at last his resources fail him, and his wonderful patience and perseverance, failed him. The prophet understands it all as he quietly advances across the room through the gathering gloom. With a tender touch, born of the infinite love of God which floods his soul after his wonderful vision, he places his hand upon the bowed head of the discouraged leader, and speaks in cheery, confident tones:

"This is the word [illegible] Zerubbabel: N[illegible] power, but [illegible] Lord of Hosts [illegible] mountain [illegible] Zerubbabel [illegible] he shall [illegible] stone thereof [illegible] Grace, grace, unto it."

Like a drowning man grasps after a straw, the soul of Zerubbabel eagerly drinks in the prophet's message. As he lifts his head new light bursts in upon his soul. He is humbled as he realizes how he has magnified his own importance in the Lord's work and has failed to reckon God as a factor in the tasks given him to do. Here was a revelation to him of the revelation which God always sends to His work He gives His children to do for Him. Here was a powerful factor in the accomplishment of the great public and religious enterprise which he had entirely overlooked. A new hope kindled in his breast as he felt the arm of God was linked in his for the successful completion of the great work. It was a different man who went forth from the presence of the prophet. He was almost ready to give up in disgust. He did not have the sympathy and cooperation of the inhabitants of the city as he had the right to demand and expect. He doubtless tried to push and drive them to the completion of the task and found that he had not power to accomplish. Perhaps he set to scolding them in the impatience of his discouragement. Perhaps he went as far as some Christians do when facing difficulties similar to those of Zerubbabel, and threatened to quit and go back to the easier surroundings of the Babylonian home. And just at the point when he fully realized how utterly helpless he was to accomplish the task before him, and when, utterly discouraged, he was ready to give up, God sent His prophet to him with the reassuring message that it was not by the might and power" of a talented and able Zerubbabel that the work of the Lord was to be accomplished, but that it was through the mysterious and marvelous operations of the Spirit of God.

THE BAND CUT ICE.

You Said in Make Music, and They Wanted to Be Set in Work at Once.

One winter when the First United States cavalry was stationed in Montana the bandmaster went to the commander of the post, Gen. Carver Grover, and reported that the members of the band had been ordered to help cut ice, relates the Detroit Free Press. He said: "Sheneral, they did not enlist us to cut ice, but to make mooshe." The commanding officer called the adjutant and on his approach said: "Mr. Adjutant, Mr. Schmidt wishes the band excused from ice fatigue; he says they enlisted to make music." Mr. Schmidt, bowing to the commanding officer, said: "Yes, sheneral, to make mooshe." The commanding officer then said: "Mr. Adjutant, the band will be excused from ice fatigue." Mr. Schmidt bowed himself out, saying: "Thank you, sheneral; thank you, sheneral." "But," continued the commanding officer, as the door closed, "Mr. Adjutant, the band will take post on the bluff overlooking the river and will make music while the rest of the command cut ice." The weather was intensely cold, and as a matter of course it was impossible for the players to make a sound, their breathing freezing on their instruments. The bandmaster again hurried to the commanding officer and said: "Sheneral, it is impossible to make mooshe; the band would raither cut ice." "Very well, Mr. Schmidt, just as you wish," replied the commanding officer, and, calling the adjutant, he said: "Mr. Adjutant, the band will cut ice."

It Was the Card.

The weary housekeeper passed beside the basket of eggs that bore the card labeled: "Fresh this morning—38 cents." "Give me a dozen of these eggs," she said. "I suppose you guarantee their freshness?"

"Well, no," said the hesitating storekeeper, "we wouldn't like to say that."

"But the card says 'Fresh this morning.'"

"Yes'm," the storekeeper reluctantly admitted. "But you see it's the card that's fresh—not the eggs."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Indigestion, congested liver, impure blood, constipation, these are what cause thousands of people who do not know what is the matter with them. They suffer from a miserable existence; they apply to the local doctors occasionally, and sometimes also in a little temporary relief, but the old tired, worn-out, all-gone, distressed feeling always comes back again. Some one ever, until in time they become tired of living, wonder why they were ever born, and why they live unless to endure constant suffering. To such sufferers there is a known remedy in Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops which is a wonderful medicine. Just trial will convince the most sceptical that any or all of these difficulties may be removed, and a perfect cure effected, by using Dr. August Koenig's Hamburg Drops. Deputy United States Marshal Coleman swooped on the church with a warrant charging Cassada with the sale of whisky without license, an offense commonly known as "boot-legging." Just as he tapped the preacher on the shoulder and asked him to come along Cassada was announcing Hymn 37 to the congregation: "Nearer, My God, To Thee."

...IN THE PHILIPPINES.

... Civil Return of Gov. William H. Taft.

The Country Since Last July Has Been Pacified By the Constabulary, a Force of Five or Six Thousand Men.

Washington, Jan. 5.—The annual report of the Philippine commission and a separate report by Gov. W. H. Taft, made public at the war department Sunday, give a review of the results of the work of the commission and contain recommendations for legislative ... y congress deemed essential ... welfare of the islands. After ... a history of the establishment of civil government throughout the various provinces, Gov. Taft, in his report, says it has not been definitely determined what shall be done with respect to Mindanao, but says hostility to the American ... is not extend beyond the Lake ... rros. The governor is of the ...nat it may be possible to induce the sultan of Jolo to ... part with ... of the rights to claims to the ...o group and thus obviate many obstacles now encountered. Mr. Moros, he says, do not understand popular government and do not desire it, preferring control by dattos.

"Possibly as far in the future," says he, "control by datto may cease. For the present, however, it is necessary to have a strong, stable and sympathetic government for these followers of Mohammed."

Gov. Taft tells of the conditions that have made it necessary for the islands to purchase about $15,000,000 worth of food on which to live, and of the effects war has had upon agriculture, almost the only source of wealth in the islands. The greatest blow to agriculture, he says, is the destruction of about half the carabao (water buffalo) ... which the cultivation of rice ... dependent. ... Asiatic ...

"The bane of Phi... in the past was latifundism, and present conditions are most favorable for its growth and maintenance. It is not certain whether in the depressed state of agriculture, with the temptation to latifundism, that the constabulary will be able without the assistance of the military, to stamp it out. Were these temptations to aggrandizement there prosperous conditions in the country, it would not be a trouble-some matter to deal with, but when want and famine are staring people in the face the life of the freebooter forms to the desperate and the weak a very great attraction. The natural discontent with the government when suffering in at hand, promoted as it is by cholera restrictions and the high prices of rice and other commodities which have been greatly increased by the depreciation of silver, might well have caused a new breaking out of the insurrection, and in my judgment it speaks wonders for the ease with which this country may be governed in normal times that we have comparatively so little disorder since the surrender of the insurgent arms in April."

Since the civil government was completely established in the Philippine provinces throughout the archipelago in July of last year the governor says an American soldier has not been called on once to fire a gun, the country having been policed by the constabulary. A force of five or six thousand men ...

It is now ... Gov. Taft, "that the ... soldier grow worn—for they are ... ckety to do so before they grow better—it will be necessary in a province like Cavite, where indronism seems inbred in the people, to proclaim martial law and even to call on the military finality to suppress it, but it is still hoped this may be avoided."

George Thought He Was Doing His Duty, But It Was Deadly Lost.

A young man in a cricket shirt and straw hat was wheeling a baby carriage backward and forward along the pavement in front of a small house in Westgate-on-Sea.

The hot afternoon sun poured pitilessly down upon him, and he was angry as any man in the neighborhood, relates the Manchester Guardian.

"My dear," came a voice from the upper window of the house.

"Let me alone, can't you?" he shrieked back, and went on wheeling and mopping his face.

An hour later the same voice came from the window in earnest, pleading tones:

"George, dear!"

"Well, what on earth do you want?" he shouted. "Have the water pipes burst?"

"No, George, dear," wailed the voice, "the water pipes are all right, but you've been wheeling Amy's doll all the afternoon. Hadn't you better let baby have a turn now?"

CASE NO. 15,741.—Rev. Jacob D. Van Doren, of 37 Sixth Street, Fond du Lac, Wis., Presbyterian clergyman, says: "A man or woman who has never had kidney complaint or any of the little ills consequent upon irritated or inactive kidneys knows very little about what prolonged suffering is. I had attacks which kept me in the house for days at a time, unable to do anything, and to express what I suffered can hardly be adequately done in ordinary Anglo-Saxon. As time passed, complications set in, the particulars of which I will be pleased to give in a personal interview in any one who requires information. I used plenty of remedies, and, ever on the lookout for something that might check or benefit my condition, I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. This I can conscientiously say, Doan's Kidney Pills caused a general improvement in my health. They brought great relief by lessening the pain and by correcting the action of the kidney secretions."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured the Rev. Jacob Van Doren will be sent by mail, application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.
